Since the impressions from the illuminated book have never before been described, full descriptions are given here. From traces of adhesive on blank leaves, and after examination under ultraviolet light, it appears that a small number of engravings and plates were removed from the album at some time before the book was given to the Morgan Library. The most significant of these, identified from offsetting, is a large impression of plate 3 from Origen. Examination of adhesive marks shows the sheet size to have been 15.7 x 4.1 cm. We have not been able to locate this single impression nor

d) Recto: Jerusalem, plate 70. No watermark. Printed in orange, uncoloured. Sheet size: 33.1 by 24.4 cm. Hand-drawn by Blake with pen and black ink along the left and top of the Trillition.

Verso: Europe, plate 1 (title-page). Printed in grey, uncoloured. Reworked by Blake with scratchwork, graphite, and pen and black ink.

Note: All edges are gilt. This impression has been considerably altered and is clearly related to the 'green-grown' versions of the same plate. One is the Flepourt Mirbeau Library.

Also in the album are five separate engravings (as described in Keynes, Separate Plates, Dublin, 1956), of which three are of considerable interest. In addition to the portraits of Wilson, Lowry (K. XLIV, final state) and John Caspar Faver (K. XXXVII, final state), Joseph of Arimathea among the Rocks of Ailly, the picture of Morand, and Arminius at the Birth of the Nation, the two amusement plates K. XXII and XXIV, engraved by Blake in stipple after Watteau, are the impressions printed in black.

(1824) attempted to arouse sympathy and raise money for these harshly-treated boys. Bernard Barton had contributed to the same volume, and was delighted by "The Whimsey Sweeper," thinking it to be his own. Probably in mid-May 1824, Barton wrote to Lamb inculcating if indeed he had written it, on May 15 Lamb replied with a long letter identifying Blake as the author; one part of it begins, "Blake is indeed a real name, I assure you." Lamb continues with an intimate account of Blake's life and work (The Letters of William Blake, ed. by Charles D. V. Jones, with Mark Lamb, edited by William S. V. Jones).

which is glorious. But, alas! I have not the Book, and the Man is flown, whither I know not to London or a Mad-house, but I must look on him as one of the most extraordinary Persons of the Age."

Such was the graphical account which I received about six years ago, of Charles Lamb, the subject of this very interesting Biography, but which I could hardly fancy was a positive Portrait from real life, till this Volume convinced me of its Truth. I am quite obliged to hear of the extensive Sale the Book has met with, to observe the interest which the Life

This has been the aim of Stephen Parks in his John Dunton and the English Book Trade. trade the depth of understanding of these connections and, say, the meaning of imprints that was demonstrated by both Sanders and Lyell last year. It is perhaps not altogether fair to make comparisons with a largely unpublished research but, nevertheless, there is a gap between the level of Dr Parks' account and the present state of scholarly understanding of the Duntun milieu and the workings of the trade during his period.

all those books with which Dutton was associated—either as author or publisher. The list contains almost 500 entries from the Appendix to the Petition of 1681 to posthumous editions of the Voyage round the World, The Life and Errors, and The Letters Written from the New-World. The notes on the various countries show how far Dr Parkes has gone in his reading and his travels in order to track down many of these works, to ascertain their correct chronology and very often even their authorship. This is a genuine contributor and one for whom many of us will be very of artists, printers and publishers, and places, subjects, a general and a chronological approach. The catalogue is arranged alphabetically. It is surprising that it does not form a dialectic function as the sort of history of printing and illustration that allows one to see at once the development in the various countries. On the other hand, it can be used through the indexes, just as it can be used to follow the production of a single printer or artist. The great advantage of this arrangement is for which one user is particularly grateful, is that it shows continuity and change in the illustration of a single author. M

The real value and service of Parks' work is in the checklist of all those books with which DuBois was associated—either as author or editor. The list contains about 400 entries from the Apprenticeship of 1881 to posthumous editions of The Voyage round the World, The Life and Errors, The Letters Written from New Land. The notes to the individual entries show just how far Dr. DuBois has gone in his reading and travels, in order to make his books so useful to his readers as to be essential to the chronology and very even their authorship. The catalogue is arranged alphabetically by author, so that it does not immediately function as a sort of index, but one to see at a glance the development in the various countries. On the other hand, it can be used through the indexes, for example, to follow the production of a single printer or publisher. The great advantage of this arrangement, for which one must at least be grateful, is the constancy and range in the production of a single author.
